Is that because there is more electronegativity in the oxygen than in the phosphorus? A: You are correct in your reasoning. However, it is important to note that this is very rarely the case, since the phosphorous often has its  $\text{P}$   $3p$  orbitals above and below the  $\text{P-O}$   $\sigma$  bond, so one  $\text{P-O}$  bond is a  $\text{sp}^2$  hybrid (which has a +0.30-ish charge), and the other is a  $\text{sp}^3$  hybrid (which has a -0.25-ish charge). This means that the charge is distributed evenly to both oxygens. 14 freelancers are bidding on average \$509 for this job Hello, Please give complete specification.
